Parenting Diverse Families & Maintaining Cultural Connections

It is possible that you will adopt a child who does not share your same race, ethnicity, religion, tribal affiliation, language, or other cultural attributes. It's important for families to acknowledge cultural differences in their home, and to actively work to create an environment that honors a child's culture. Failing to do so can lead to isolation or identity confusion. We strongly encourage you read the following material in order to prepare for this possibility.

Maintaining Beneficial Connections

Many children in care have relationships with family, caregivers, or other important people that are beneficial to the child. It is often recommended that a child maintain these relationships after adoption. Continuing relationships with important people can ease feelings of grief and loss, aid in identity development, and provide a sense of belonging. In order to understand the importance and benefits of helping your child maintain connections, we recommend you read the below material.
